My clients that do actually end up being in a relationship, or even getting married one day, have common goals for the future. That helps to increase their chemistry, because they can see a future together. Ask them about their professional dreams to get a sense of their life goals. Whether the person youre trying to get to know better is a colleague, a friend, or a romantic interest, these questions can help you get an idea of where they see their career heading and how they envision the future. Theyll also tell you something about their values, passions, and work ethic.How did you end up in your current job?If you could have another career, what would it be?What's your absolute dream job, and has it changed since you were 11?If you could switch roles with anyone at your company, who would it be?Whats the biggest misconception about your job?If you could only choose one word to describe your working style, what would it be?Whats the best thing youve ever achieved in the workplace?Whats one thing thats been challenging for you recently?What are your professional goals for the next year?Whats the best career advice youve ever received?What would you choose an unlimited supply of in the office?Whats the most memorable moment in your career so far?Whats your favorite thing about working in your industry?Whats your go-to productivity playlist or music?Whats something youre passionate about outside of work?If you could change one thing about your job, what would it be?Whats the best work-related book youve read?How do you like to unwind after a busy or stressful day?Whats your favorite way to celebrate a work-related achievement?If you could automate one part of your job, what would it be?If you could work remotely from anywhere in the world, where would you choose?Who is your dream career mentor?Whats the most rewarding part of your job?Whats is your most productive time of day?If you could design your perfect office, what would it look like?Whats your favorite quote or mantra that motivates you at work?Whats the most fun project youve ever worked on? Advertisement 1Actively listen when they respond. Active listening is about showing the other person youre paying attention and that youre invested in what theyre saying. Some ways to show youre listening include maintaining eye contact, nodding occasionally, and asking good follow-up questions.[15]Active listening lets the other person know youre interested in learning more about them, who they are, and their experiences. Its a great way to build trust and help them want to open up to you.Another great tip? Make sure youre giving the other person your undivided attention while theyre speaking, instead of trying to think about what youre going to say next!2Approach the conversation with curiosity. Even if youve got great questions prepared, the interaction is likely to fall flat unless you maintain curiosity and propel the conversation forward. Rather than hop from question to question, dive deeper into the questions that interest you or that the person youre talking to seems particularly interested in.Not only can being curious about their answers help you both dive into deeper, more personal waters, itll likely help them feel valued and like what theyre telling you matterswhich is also a great way to bond!For instance, if they answer the question Whats one thing you value in your friendships? with I value laughter, you might reply with, Which of your friends do you laugh the most with? or What makes you laugh?3Stay open-minded. Asking personal questions is a great way to learn more about someone else experiences and viewpoints. Try to keep an open mind when you hear their responses, even if you disagree or dont understand where theyre coming from. Youll probably learn something you didnt know!
